Dear Josh:

You had not sent me a copy of the reprint from Ann. Rev. Genetics before mid-April. I found it a very impressive statement that I supported more convincingly than I had recognized, the carefully worded summary in your next to the last paragraph. Still, I'm afraid I don't quite buy the case for giving Ed such a leading role in the development of the new methodology. He participated importantly but when <sup>I think</sup> <sub>of</sub> <sup>more</sup> CSFT, particularly <sup>or at</sup> back on Yale discussions.

don't remember him as "the man intellectual leader — unless his stubbornness about accepting new concepts until they were inescapable, while pursuing well-designed experiments, was, in itself, the powerful <sup>(too)</sup> that integrated "conceptual strands".

It is hard to remember that the methodology had to be discovered.

As I remember its development, a good number of bright people were involved fully as effectively as E.C.

Thank you also for your note about Mother. I wish you could have known her in the 40s!

I'm off the Pop Council Board now so not very helpful to happen in at R.U. Nice to be encouraged tho!

Best always,

Pally
